(Photo Credit: number Group) The other Paper article explained how the story of Penny & The Quarters took a surprising turning point when Ryan Gosling was visiting the Pr of him two years after the release of Eccentric Soul: The Prix Label. During Gosling's visit, his agent played some songs from the compilation and was immediately hit by You & Meâ. Shortly after him he approached the director Blue Valentine Derek Cianfrance on the use of the song in the film. The director loved the song and accepted, giving the unpublished demo cut by Ohio recording another act in its history in constant evolution. Some research found the owner of the Prix Caerda and letters and lett two field trips to Columbus. But a complete mystery has thrown its way on our final compilation of Prix. "You and Me", a simple but unrepeatable demo accredited only to Penny & the Quarters, was found attached on a mixed study coil. Our survey of every volunteer lifer left on the scene of the soul of Colombo, including retired DJs, producers and important local artists, produced not so much as a sparkly recognition to the name Penny & the Quarters. Although listeners a local artists, produced not so much as a sparkly recognition to the name Penny & the Quarters. had repeatedly told us that the uncontaminated demos of the studio that fill the back half of the disk were real diamonds in the rough. But neither Penny nor her neighborhoods had appeared to claim credit for their efforts. Then, completely out of field left, we heard from respected screen actor and avowed Number fans Ryan Gosling that Penny piercing bit of stripped down doo-wop was considered for inclusion in Derek Cianfrance Blue Valentine's indie-weeper movie. What we didn't know was that "You and Me" had won an important role in what became a successful indie circuit, and that Penny & i Quarters would immediately assume the role of the world's most famous unknown doo-wop group. Every week is a weekLenten to Columbus, Ohio, and in early January 2011 found the city recovering from the thrill of elevation of Ted Williams - the former homeless with the impressive voice for the radio - in a feeling of national news. But both important newspapers in town, as well as the city¢ÃÂs alternative weekly, also ran stories about how a lost and unknown Columbus soul group had become the musical centerpiece of a film already garnering Oscar buzz. That mainstream spotlight aimed at Blue Valentine and Penny & the Quarters did the trick: we finally made contact with the widow of Jay Robinson, lead Quarters AÂA singer and songwriter. Robinson, it turned out, had also been the leader of Columbus doo-wop pioneers The Supremes (later known as ¢ÃÂÂThe Columbus Supremes,¢Ã for reasons which should be obvious). Jay Robinson never did give up on the dream of writing a hit record; even so, the posthumous realization of his dream is cold comfort for his widow and daughter. With their blessings, we returned to those estate sale masters and pulled down another neglected track (¢ÃÂŶou Are Giving Me Some Other Love¢ÃÂÂ) from the still-unknown Penny and her now-partly-known Quarters. ¢ÃÂŶou and Me¢Ã is a song that could not be suppressed: not when Prix failed to release it; not when Penny & the Quarters were forgotten; not when Numero stuck it at the bitter end of a much overlooked compilation. Its evolution from estate sale trash to silver-screen gold has finally returned it to big-hole 45, where it probably should have lived all along. along.
